Deluxe Box Set –four feature-length movies based on the Emmy Award® winning series

"In my house," John Leonard began in his New York magazine review, of December 1994, "Cagney & Lacey was to prime time what The Golden Notebook had been to modern novels and modern marriage: street-smart feminism: politics and friendship; therapy on the barricades; brains on a rampage. Before Doris Lessing, we had never heard women talk like that in fiction. Before Cagney & Lacey, we'd never seen them act like that on television. Without Chris and Mary Beth, Thelma and Louise would not have been imaginable. And so it's a joy to have them back..."

Most professional analysts of these films invariably make some reference to the fact that during the series' six years on the air, no other actress...NOT ONE... only Tyne Daly or Sharon Gless... would win the EMMY® for Best Dramatic Actress in a television series. These movies seemed to serve as a reminder to those commentators as to why that was.

The films herein, individually labeled The Return, Together Again, The View from the Glass Ceiling and True Convictions. Collectively they were all lovingly known as Cagney & Lacey: The Menopause Years.

—Barney Rosenzweig (producer)

"Hot flashes, insomnia, diminished libido . . .
Why don't they take me out and shoot me?"

—Christine Cagney

Things have changed: Mary Beth Lacey has quit the police force and having little success in finding work and Christine Cagney is now a married lieutenant working for the D.A.'s office...and facing the specter of menopause. They may have lost touch, but circumstances bring them back together again.

The Return remains true to the series. It is quality drama that concentrates on the personal lives and the interaction between two complex women dealing with a tough and dangerous job. Sharon Gless and Tyne Daly are amazing actresses playing two of the greatest female characters ever portrayed on television. This is a perfect movie, especially for fans of Cagney & Lacey or for anyone who enjoys drama about women.
